What is health screening?

It is the routine screening of employees to identify health issues that may affect their ability to do their job.

Why is it important?

For an employer, some screening requirements are mandatory so it helps organisations to be legally compliant; for an employee, it can help safeguard their health now and in the future.

What are the benefits?

Healthier workers are more productive and early detection of ill health or injury can help prevent prolonged absenteeism.

Where does screening take place?

Usually in the work environment to save time and reduce travelling costs.

What if there are no suitable facilities available?

MOHS has three fully equipped mobile screening units, including a 3.5 tonne flagship unit offering the latest high tech services.

What screening services are available?

- Soundproofed audiometry booth for hearing tests
- Hand arm vibration assessments
- Respiratory (lung function) assessments
- Skin assessments
- Drug and alcohol testing
- Forklift medicals
- Musculoskeletal assessments
- New starter / general health / fitness to work health assessments
- Vision testing – near, far, peripheral, VDU assessment, colour blindness, depth and visual fields
- Health promotion and wellbeing e.g. cholesterol testing, weight management etc
- DSE assessments

What is the geographical reach of the units?

The units cover all parts of the UK, including multiple client sites.

Who provides the services?

Our team of highly skilled screening technicians and occupational health advisors.

In which sectors does MOHS have experience?
